

Evening Star.

Local Intelligence.

EXAMINATION OF THE BROTHERS GLANTZ.—On Saturday evening, the brothers Christian and Charles Henry Glantz were brought out of jail, and examined before Justice Donn on a charge of assault and battery with intent to kill Mr. Duvall, now blind, about two weeks ago. Being present at the trial, we took notes, but find in the Seaford a fair report of the proceedings. On Benjamin P. Smith, says that paper, by request of Mr. Biggs, the prosecuting attorney for Prince George's county, appeared on the part of the State of Maryland, and assisted Captain Jonathan C. E. Morgan in the examination of the witness.

The office was crowded with spectators, who appeared to be much interested in the proceedings.

Mr. Duvall, who is still exceedingly feeble from the effects of the wounds which he received, testified to the effect of the affidavit which recently appeared in this paper; repeating that when the brothers Glantz, who had been gunning on his farm, were ordered off by him, he did not take hold of either of them; and that he was shot while in the act of running away from them.

In reply to a question by Mr. Biggs, he said that he did not curse the young men, he indignantly said that there was no curse.

He further remarked that there was no malice in the affidavit, he thought he would die if Dr. Penn said he did not believe that he could live.

Officer Newman, of Bladensburg, and officer Timms, of this city, the officers who arrested the brothers Glantz, testified as to the facts attending that day; the prisoners having been traced, on the afternoon of the day of the shooting, to a tager hotel, which delayed on the way. Between New York and Philadelphia, the car ran over a cow, causing delay, and after leaving Philadelphia, the accident occurred before reaching the Susquehanna.

Passengers for the South arrived here yesterday morning at 10 o'clock, having been thirty-six hours on the road.

Passengers for the West arrived here yesterday morning at 10 o'clock, having been thirty-four hours on the road.

Justice Clements, of Bladensburg, justified the Dr. Penn told him that Mr. Duvall would die.

He took the affidavit of the last named gentleman.

Gustavus A. Clarke, having been sworn, said he saw the brothers in jail on the morning after the shooting. The elder told him that he had received a blow on the forehead from Mr. Duvall. The witness looked a little blue.

Philip Becker, a German, a young man in jail on Monday morning. He did not look at the forehead of the elder Glantz there. There was another fellow present.

Mr. Morgan. Ah! who was he?

Philip Becker. It was not a man. It was Glantz's wife. [Laughter.]

Mr. Larivette, one of the jail guards, testified that he observed a red spot on the forehead of the elder Glantz, when the prisoner was brought to jail, looking as if he had been struck.

He then struck his brother. If he had been struck, Mr. Duvall would have killed him; he would have given him through his usual speedy pet, careful to the bone.

Much credit is due to Mr. Duvall for his promptness to accommodate, at an extra expense, the detainee.

Justice Clements, of Bladensburg, justified the Dr. Penn told him that Mr. Duvall would die.

He took the affidavit of the last named gentleman.

Gustavus A. Clarke, above, was sworn, said he saw the brothers in jail on the morning after the shooting. The elder told him that he had received a blow on the forehead from Mr. Duvall. The witness looked a little blue.

Philip Becker, a German, a young man in jail on Monday morning. He did not look at the forehead of the elder Glantz there. There was another fellow present.

Mr. Morgan. Ah! who was he?

Philip Becker. It was not a man. It was Glantz's wife. [Laughter.]

Mr. Larivette, one of the jail guards, testified that he observed a red spot on the forehead of the elder Glantz, when the prisoner was brought to jail, looking as if he had been struck.

He then struck his brother. If he had been struck, Mr. Duvall would have killed him; he would have given him through his usual speedy pet, careful to the bone.

Much credit is due to Mr. Duvall for his promptness to accommodate, at an extra expense, the detainee.

Justice Clements, of Bladensburg, justified the Dr. Penn told him that Mr. Duvall would die.

He took the affidavit of the last named gentleman.

Gustavus A. Clarke, above, was sworn, said he saw the brothers in jail on the morning after the shooting. The elder told him that he had received a blow on the forehead from Mr. Duvall. The witness looked a little blue.

Philip Becker, a German, a young man in jail on Monday morning. He did not look at the forehead of the elder Glantz there. There was another fellow present.

Mr. Morgan. Ah! who was he?

Philip Becker. It was not a man. It was Glantz's wife. [Laughter.]

Mr. Larivette, one of the jail guards, testified that he observed a red spot on the forehead of the elder Glantz, when the prisoner was brought to jail, looking as if he had been struck.

He then struck his brother. If he had been struck, Mr. Duvall would have killed him; he would have given him through his usual speedy pet, careful to the bone.

Much credit is due to Mr. Duvall for his promptness to accommodate, at an extra expense, the detainee.

Justice Clements, of Bladensburg, justified the Dr. Penn told him that Mr. Duvall would die.

He took the affidavit of the last named gentleman.

Gustavus A. Clarke, above, was sworn, said he saw the brothers in jail on the morning after the shooting. The elder told him that he had received a blow on the forehead from Mr. Duvall. The witness looked a little blue.

Philip Becker, a German, a young man in jail on Monday morning. He did not look at the forehead of the elder Glantz there. There was another fellow present.

Mr. Morgan. Ah! who was he?

Philip Becker. It was not a man. It was Glantz's wife. [Laughter.]

Mr. Larivette, one of the jail guards, testified that he observed a red spot on the forehead of the elder Glantz, when the prisoner was brought to jail, looking as if he had been struck.

He then struck his brother. If he had been struck, Mr. Duvall would have killed him; he would have given him through his usual speedy pet, careful to the bone.

Much credit is due to Mr. Duvall for his promptness to accommodate, at an extra expense, the detainee.

Justice Clements, of Bladensburg, justified the Dr. Penn told him that Mr. Duvall would die.

He took the affidavit of the last named gentleman.

Gustavus A. Clarke, above, was sworn, said he saw the brothers in jail on the morning after the shooting. The elder told him that he had received a blow on the forehead from Mr. Duvall. The witness looked a little blue.

Philip Becker, a German, a young man in jail on Monday morning. He did not look at the forehead of the elder Glantz there. There was another fellow present.

Mr. Morgan. Ah! who was he?

Philip Becker. It was not a man. It was Glantz's wife. [Laughter.]

Mr. Larivette, one of the jail guards, testified that he observed a red spot on the forehead of the elder Glantz, when the prisoner was brought to jail, looking as if he had been struck.

He then struck his brother. If he had been struck, Mr. Duvall would have killed him; he would have given him through his usual speedy pet, careful to the bone.

Much credit is due to Mr. Duvall for his promptness to accommodate, at an extra expense, the detainee.

Justice Clements, of Bladensburg, justified the Dr. Penn told him that Mr. Duvall would die.

He took the affidavit of the last named gentleman.

Gustavus A. Clarke, above, was sworn, said he saw the brothers in jail on the morning after the shooting. The elder told him that he had received a blow on the forehead from Mr. Duvall. The witness looked a little blue.

Philip Becker, a German, a young man in jail on Monday morning. He did not look at the forehead of the elder Glantz there. There was another fellow present.

Mr. Morgan. Ah! who was he?

Philip Becker. It was not a man. It was Glantz's wife. [Laughter.]

Mr. Larivette, one of the jail guards, testified that he observed a red spot on the forehead of the elder Glantz, when the prisoner was brought to jail, looking as if he had been struck.

He then struck his brother. If he had been struck, Mr. Duvall would have killed him; he would have given him through his usual speedy pet, careful to the bone.

Much credit is due to Mr. Duvall for his promptness to accommodate, at an extra expense, the detainee.

Justice Clements, of Bladensburg, justified the Dr. Penn told him that Mr. Duvall would die.

He took the affidavit of the last named gentleman.

Gustavus A. Clarke, above, was sworn, said he saw the brothers in jail on the morning after the shooting. The elder told him that he had received a blow on the forehead from Mr. Duvall. The witness looked a little blue.

Philip Becker, a German, a young man in jail on Monday morning. He did not look at the forehead of the elder Glantz there. There was another fellow present.

Mr. Morgan. Ah! who was he?

Philip Becker. It was not a man. It was Glantz's wife. [Laughter.]

Mr. Larivette, one of the jail guards, testified that he observed a red spot on the forehead of the elder Glantz, when the prisoner was brought to jail, looking as if he had been struck.

He then struck his brother. If he had been struck, Mr. Duvall would have killed him; he would have given him through his usual speedy pet, careful to the bone.

Much credit is due to Mr. Duvall for his promptness to accommodate, at an extra expense, the detainee.

Justice Clements, of Bladensburg, justified the Dr. Penn told him that Mr. Duvall would die.

He took the affidavit of the last named gentleman.

Gustavus A. Clarke, above, was sworn, said he saw the brothers in jail on the morning after the shooting. The elder told him that he had received a blow on the forehead from Mr. Duvall. The witness looked a little blue.

Philip Becker, a German, a young man in jail on Monday morning. He did not look at the forehead of the elder Glantz there. There was another fellow present.

Mr. Morgan. Ah! who was he?

Philip Becker. It was not a man. It was Glantz's wife. [Laughter.]

Mr. Larivette, one of the jail guards, testified that he observed a red spot on the forehead of the elder Glantz, when the prisoner was brought to jail, looking as if he had been struck.

He then struck his brother. If he had been struck, Mr. Duvall would have killed him; he would have given him through his usual speedy pet, careful to the bone.

Much credit is due to Mr. Duvall for his promptness to accommodate, at an extra expense, the detainee.

Justice Clements, of Bladensburg, justified the Dr. Penn told him that Mr. Duvall would die.

He took the affidavit of the last named gentleman.

Gustavus A. Clarke, above, was sworn, said he saw the brothers in jail on the morning after the shooting. The elder told him that he had received a blow on the forehead from Mr. Duvall. The witness looked a little blue.

Philip Becker, a German, a young man in jail on Monday morning. He did not look at the forehead of the elder Glantz there. There was another fellow present.

Mr. Morgan. Ah! who was he?

Philip Becker. It was not a man. It was Glantz's wife. [Laughter.]

Mr. Larivette, one of the jail guards, testified that he observed a red spot on the forehead of the elder Glantz, when the prisoner was brought to jail, looking as if he had been struck.

He then struck his brother. If he had been struck, Mr. Duvall would have killed him; he would have given him through his usual speedy pet, careful to the bone.

Much credit is due to Mr. Duvall for his promptness to accommodate, at an extra expense, the detainee.

Justice Clements, of Bladensburg, justified the Dr. Penn told him that Mr. Duvall would die.

He took the affidavit of the last named gentleman.

Gustavus A. Clarke, above, was sworn, said he saw the brothers in jail on the morning after the shooting. The elder told him that he had received a blow on the forehead from Mr. Duvall. The witness looked a little blue.

Philip Becker, a German, a young man in jail on Monday morning. He did not look at the forehead of the elder Glantz there. There was another fellow present.

Mr. Morgan. Ah! who was he?

Philip Becker. It was not a man. It was Glantz's wife. [Laughter.]

Mr. Larivette, one of the jail guards, testified that he observed a red spot on the forehead of the elder Glantz, when the prisoner was brought to jail, looking as if he had been struck.

He then struck his brother. If he had been struck, Mr. Duvall would have killed him; he would have given him through his usual speedy pet, careful to the bone.

Much credit is due to Mr. Duvall for his promptness to accommodate, at an extra expense, the detainee.

Justice Clements, of Bladensburg, justified the Dr. Penn told him that Mr. Duvall would die.

He took the affidavit of the last named gentleman.

Gustavus A. Clarke, above, was sworn, said he saw the brothers in jail on the morning after the shooting. The elder told him that he had received a blow on the forehead from Mr. Duvall. The witness looked a little blue.

Philip Becker, a German, a young man in jail on Monday morning. He did not look at the forehead of the elder Glantz there. There was another fellow present.

Mr. Morgan. Ah! who was he?

Philip Becker. It was not a man. It was Glantz's wife. [Laughter.]

Mr. Larivette, one of the jail guards, testified that he observed a red spot on the forehead of the elder Glantz, when the prisoner was brought to jail, looking as if he had been struck.

He then struck his brother. If he had been struck, Mr. Duvall would have killed him; he would have given him through his usual speedy pet, careful to the bone.

Much credit is due to Mr. Duvall for his promptness to accommodate, at an extra expense, the detainee.

Justice Clements, of Bladensburg, justified the Dr. Penn told him that Mr. Duvall would die.

He took the affidavit of the last named gentleman.

Gustavus A. Clarke, above, was sworn, said he saw the brothers in jail on the morning after the shooting. The elder told him that he had received a blow on the forehead from Mr. Duvall. The witness looked a little blue.

Philip Becker, a German, a young man in jail on Monday morning. He did not look at the forehead of the elder Glantz there. There was another fellow present.

Mr. Morgan. Ah! who was he?

Philip Becker. It was not a man. It was Glantz's wife. [Laughter.]

Mr. Larivette, one of the jail guards, testified that he observed a red spot on the forehead of the elder Glantz, when the prisoner was brought to jail, looking as if he had been struck.

He then struck his brother. If he had been struck, Mr. Duvall would have killed him; he would have given him through his usual speedy pet, careful to the bone.